Read the passage below and choose the best answer to the question.

I'm in the Musee d'Orsay art gallery in Paris and I'm looking at one of the most famous paintings in the world, Poppies by Monet. But I can't actually see it well, because there are two tourists standing in front of it, and they are taking photos of the painting. But wait... no, it's not a photo...it's a film. They are filming the painting.

As they go off, one says, I'll post that on Facebook and have a look at it back at the hotel'. Another tourist arrives, looks at the painting for a second, takes a photograph of it, and moves on. But why do more than three million people visit this gallery every year? Isn't the whole reason to see the paintings 'live'? OK, you can look at them on the museum website, but seeing them actually in front of you is a different ²⁶ _____. Really these tourists aren't looking at the painting at all – they are recording their own lives. And it's not just in exhibitions in galleries and museums. It happens all the time at college, too. Fewer students come to lectures now- they just ask their friends to record them. Some people don't live their lives in the moment anymore, they simply record them and look at them later.
